

INT. CLINIC CONTROL ROOM - EVENING

Behind a glass wall, Dr. Fleischer and his assistant sit and monitor Nancy. In front of them are numerous monitors that gauge Nancy's heart rate, blood pressure, eye and jaw movement, etc. In the center of the console in front of Dr. Fleischer is a small intercom microphone that connects the two rooms. Dr. Fleischer speaks into the microphone.

DR. FLEISCHER

Now, Nancy, you should be falling asleep any moment now.
Just relax.

Dr. Fleischer dims the lights in the sleeping room and begins checking the monitors in front of him. After a few seconds, he brings the lights back up. The light hurts Nancy's eyes. In the control room, Dr. Fleischer speaks into the intercom microphone.

DR. FLEISCHER (CONT'D)

I'm sorry, Nancy. One of the electrodes seems to be malfunctioning.
Could you check to see if your ECG wires are attached properly?

CUT TO:

INT. CLINIC SLEEPING ROOM - EVENING

Nancy sits up in the bed and looks at the monitoring equipment in the room. She drowsily looks at the equipment, not quite knowing what to look for. She then hears Dr. Fleischer on the intercom.

DR. FLEISCHER

The equipment is fine, Nancy. We just need for you to check the wires on your chest.

Nancy begins to unbutton her top.

CUT TO:

INT. CLINIC CONTROL ROOM - EVENING

Dr. Fleischer leans over toward his assistant with a confused look on his face.

DR. FLEISCHER

What is she doing?

CUT TO:

INT. CLINIC SLEEPING ROOM - EVENING

As Nancy opens the top of her blouse, she looks down to see that the ECG electrode directly over her heart has attached itself to her skin. It appears to have melded itself onto her chest.

NANCY

Oh my god!

Nancy struggles to remove the electrode, screaming as she frantically tugs on the wires. A hand reaches out and grabs Nancy by the throat, slamming her hard onto the bed. We see the hand belongs to Freddy. Nancy frantically grabs at his hand.

CUT TO: